Looking for material from the Library of Congress? Elsevier? Edinburgh University Press? Credo Reference hosts more than 550 reference titles from those and other respected houses. Jennifer Michaelson says it's the best database she uses, with straightforward search and results pages. The database can be linked to the library's OPAC and to other resources. Credo also offers several unusual features: a "Gadget" bar on the homepage, for example, with search boxes labeled "Define," "Person," "Images," "Pronunciation," "Crossword Solver," and "Conversions" (e.g., temperature, area). Best of all, though, says Lura Sanborn, are the database's "Topic Pages," gathering materials by subject, which adds accessibility op-also praises Credo's Mind Map feature for narrowing and broadening topics, helping students to visualize their topic and identify keywords. The upcoming Credo literati is an information literacy add-on that includes subject-specific tutorials and videos, customization that reflects the language an institution uses for information literacy instruction, pre- and postassessment surveys, and library marketing programs.
